UNIVERSITY FOCUS

Report: 4.01 – Sustainability Efforts

Senior Vice President Ruth Watkins introduced Amy Wildermuth, Associate Vice President for Faculty; Brenda Bowen, Director of Global Change & Sustainability Center; Myron Wilson, Deputy Chief Sustainability Officer, who gave an overview of the campus's sustainability efforts.

Amy Wildermuth began the presentation by asking the question, “Why is sustainability important?” As students are choosing a campus to attend, one of their top concerns is sustainability and campus efforts towards sustainability. Previously the sustainability office was housed under the facilities umbrella, which is typical of many campuses, but the efforts were disconnected from the academic enterprise. The University of Utah moved its sustainability office, which now reports directly to the Senior Vice President for Academic Affairs with a dotted line to Senior Vice President Vivian Lee. This has helped integrate the academic mission of the University with the efforts of the sustainability office. The sustainability office works with great partners who collaborate with sustainability office on various projects. Their job is to bring different constituencies together to solve common problems, and the charge of the Sustainability Office is to help and support. One of the biggest misconceptions is that the office is tied to environmental advocacy. The sustainability office are not advocates, they are here to support the sustainability mission of the university. They support the institution on what they would like to accomplish with the great partnership that have been established and will be established.

Brenda Bowen’s role is director of Global Change and Sustainability Center, which is a network of faculty across campus, who are working on sustainability scholarships and linking the efforts of sustainability to academic’s mission of research education. They are creating an environment of interdisciplinary faculty coming together to address some of the most challenging problems facing society today. Building the best is much like building a home, three important parts are:

- Location – In this location individuals are very connected with their environment, what is going on around them, and environmental changes. The intention is to use these connections to develop ground breaking research.
- Home – There are amazing world-class facilities here on campus.
- People – We’ve built the best by recruiting faculty who are working in interdisciplinary teams.

Myron Wilson mentioned that the campus is a living lab and a model for what is possible. It’s not just about reducing emissions but about bringing people together and building constituencies.

A copy of the report is included as Appendix II with the official minutes of this meeting and is on file in the office of the Secretary to the University.
SENIOR VICE PRESIDENTS’ REPORTS

Report: 5.01 – Academic Affairs Report

Senior Vice President Ruth Watkins noted a reception was held last week to welcome new faculty to campus. The reception is a way to help the new faculty find a community here on campus and to help them feel connected and supported. Watkins also noted that we are close to the official report on enrollment and final information will be coming soon. Watkins also commented on the amazing facilities that support and house our faculty, staff and students. We are thrilled with the opening of the Thomas S. Monson Center, which is a wonderful place for our work and an extension of the university into the relationships into the community. The biggest and best news of the fall was taking offline the largest classroom building (Orson Spencer Hall) without complaint or problem.

ACADEMIC SENATE

Report: 6.01 – Academic Senate Report

Academic Senate President Xan Johnson reported the senate has held their first meeting of the academic year. The meeting was energized and productive. Three things of interest to the Trustees are:
